Abstract

The Immersive Cinematic 3D Creativity Toolkit is a collection of equipment and software enabling exciting new possibilities in artistic expression and media engineering. The proposal is designed to maximize flexible use of the component parts for smaller creative research projects, as well as the compelling ability to combine multiple aspects into sophisticated cinematic and immersive environments. The Toolkit focuses on the capture and creation of innovative 3D media content by leveraging the existing facilities and resources available through DXARTS and CARTAH. This will allow students to literally take their projects to a new dimension. Furthermore, through the staging of Portable Immersive Theater events, the student body will be able to experience the newest worldwide innovations in 3D media content as well as projects created here on campus. The package has been researched and constructed by a team of PhD candidates at the Center for Digital Arts and Experimental Media in consultation with DXARTS faculty.

Background

The Center for Digital Arts and Experimental Media is a new degree granting program unique to the University of Washington. DXARTS is designed to establish the University of Washington as one of the world's leading institutions for the creation and study of new and experimental genres of digital art and culture. Part of our mandate is to expand access to the technologies and techniques of digital arts to as many students as possible. This includes all STF purchased equipment, as well as a great deal of equipment purchased through other means.

DXARTS prides itself on opening access to advanced technological tools and techniques to all students of the University of Washington, and we work to create a vibrant and active community of artists and researchers who work together from across many disciplines. To further these goals we have worked to build partnerships that bring unique resources to the University of Washington and that make those resources available to all students.

Through the previous support of the STF, Apple computer, and DXARTS UIF funds, the Center for Digital Arts and Experimental Media has created numerous opportunities for students to create works of art that could not previously have been realized. This proposal would create even greater opportunities for creative expression and research in the technology arts, and provide the means for students to envision and realize cinematic 3D immersive art environments.

Since its inception, the number of student inquiries to DXARTS about the availability of cinematic equipment and learning opportunities has continued to skyrocket. To address the needs and desires of the student body, DXARTS has responded by creating more courses that offer experience in video production, including a new course to be offered Spring term and a summer intensive session where the entire class creates a full video production together. What this STF proposal offers to students is the ability to take the skills that they've learned beyond the classroom and realize projects of their own generation that expand the scope of cinematic production, and enable them to make lasting contributions to the history of digital arts.

The proposal has three major categories - the Digital Stereographic Cinema kit (DSCK), the Touch Environment Sensing Tools (TEST), and the Portable Immersive Theater (the PIT).

The Digital Stereographic Cinema kit (DSCK) is a set of tools that open the realm of 3D depth cinematography to students. To properly capture 3D stereo cinema, it is essential to have an dual-imaging system composed of identical twinned cameras that sync together, where the information is recorded simultaneously from two perspectives. It is this duality of capture that matches the way our eyes see 3D depth, allowing student cinematographers and directors to truly work in another dimension of visual expression and composition. Our proposal has two such dual-camera systems. One is designed for recording live action real-time footage using HDV cameras, and a separate one for stop-motion animation using high-end professional quality digital SLR still cameras. Each system is specifically designed to capture two very different types of real world content. These two camera rigs are built to function primarily as units for stereo image capture, but individual cameras can also be removed for use in other creative research projects. For instance, a student could use one HDV camera to shoot a High Definition movie in 2D, or one Pro SLR camera to capture print-quality high resolution images for a gallery show. HDV is a new High Definition video format that is currently reshaping the professional video and independent film production industry. HDV features light-weight, field-friendly cameras that record High Definition video footage direct-to-disc. Unlike many other more expensive HD technologies, which require a dedicated post-production chain, HDV footage can be edited and monitored in real time on standard computer editing software such as Final Cut Pro running on a Macintosh G5. By utilizing HDV technology, DXARTS can provide High Definition video production to UW students by building onto resources and facilities already in place. Continuing in the digital production pipeline, one of the outstanding needs for adding quality 3D computer graphics elements to creative projects are inexpensive, easy to use, durable and portable digital still cameras. With these, students can easily take photographs that can then be used as textures and translated into screen based visual artworks. Currently DXARTS does not have any digital still cameras for student use, and this is seriously limiting the realization of such works. We're requesting four Sony CyberShot DSC-P200 digital still cameras, based on their quality, very reasonable cost, portability and durability. In conjunction with the still cameras, the software package Photomodeller allows students to use these cameras to not only capture 2D images, but to actually recreate and reconstruct 3D models based on existing physical structures right from photographs.

The Touch Environment Sensing Tools (TEST) is a small suite of components that concentrate on gesture-based and force-feedback interfaces where the dimensionality of sound and visual space is echoed and enhanced by the immediacy of the sense of touch. These haptic control and response devices function as a direct yet poetic link to the previously introduced realms of audio-visual exploration. Through the use of these tools, students can mold the virtual sculptures they are creating by touch, use gestures of the hand to activate and orchestrate complex generative realtime artworks, and create works that allow the audience to physically feel a cinematic experience. This set of haptic software and hardware completes the goal of immersion by incorporating the use of the kinesthetic and touch senses of the human body. To further integrate and expand that live content with digital image synthesis, the Claytools software package and Omni haptic device will allow for greater control and more intuitive creation of 3D computer graphics models.

Finally, the Portable Immersive Theater (the PIT) serves as the primary display mechanism for the content created with the other tools. In a major commitment to 3D content and display technology, 85 commercial cinemas across the nation have recently installed projection systems of the same type we are proposing. This is the same technology used for the recent release of the Disney Digital film Chicken Little in 3D. These systems utilize one projector instead of two, which makes the setup much easier to calibrate and maintain than the older two-projector schemes. Though 3D has been attempted before in cinema, it faded away almost entirely due to poor quality projection systems and incompatibilities. Our design uses the newest, best technology to overcome these problems and offer a spectacular format for content creation that is the wave of the future. Furthermore, by adopting the industry standard we know these systems will be supported for years, and we can offer students the unique opportunity to be at the forefront of cinematic technology.

Benefits

A key goal of this proposal is that the majority of the equipment can be used towards expanding the ability of students to create digital theatre content. The Toolkit is designed to address the needs and desires of the student body to create film and be involved in the process of producing such works. We are addressing the expanding realm of cinematic creation with an eye to the future trends in technology by combining HDV and 3D stereoscopic formats. We have built this proposal to support a fully digital production pipeline — where live, stop-motion, and synthetic images can be fluidly combined and manipulated with software tools.

With the additions provided for in this proposal, a student would be able to conceive, create, film, and edit a full cinematic work of art in 3D sound and image. That's an extraordinary opportunity to offer to students — one place they can go to access everything they need to realize an ambitious cinematic project, and the expertise to help them maximize their experience. A significant benefit to students working with this equipment will be the abundance of help they will receive from both DXARTS and CARTAH, as well as from the community of students and researchers in working with these tools.

A secondary, but still vital use of these tools is the ability for students to use smaller configurations of software and equipment in the realization of experimental media art projects that fall outside the usual definitions of cinema. Some examples of this type of work include live telematic performances with artists in remote locations, realtime tracking of dancers that could trigger computer-generated graphics, and virtual sculptures designed to be experienced only through the touch-based interface of haptic devices. Combined with resources already available, this proposal presents an extraordinary opportunity to provide students with a state of the art suite of technologically sophisticated, yet flexible creative tools.

Student Access

The Immersive 3D Creativity Toolkit allows access to students in four different ways.

Firstly, in our courses, DXARTS will be providing expert training in production processes that will maximize the ability of students to create works in various media that take advantage of 3D technology. Such students will be qualified to use components of the toolkit. DXARTS courses are open to non-majors, and the cross-disciplinary nature of the program means that students from almost every field will be involved in these classes.

Secondly, any students who have pre-approved access, either through DXARTS or through a CARTAH project will be allowed access to the equipment and resources in this proposal. All students are eligible to apply for a CARTAH project and most student applications are approved. In addition, CARTAH provides the training for specific skills students need to properly use the equipment.

Thirdly, the Portable Immersive Theater offers the student body and members of the greater community a way to experience innovative 3D media content in the form of public performances and viewings. Expanding on the success of the Meany Hall concerts organized by DXARTS each year, we will use this system to show original works of immersive 3D art composed for this format that would otherwise be impossible to experience. These events will feature work created by UW students, as well as provide an opportunity to screen works of international importance. In this way, the proposal comes full circle — it provides the tools for students to both create innovative artistic works, and then brings those works to a larger audience. This is a vital step in the development of a professional artist, and has the added benefit of expanding the cultural learning experience on campus. In fact, not only is student work shown at these events, but students play a vital role in planning, installing, and running the shows, offering yet another learning opportunity for students to build professional skills that will serve them in the future.

Finally, the equipment in this proposal will be useful to other types of research on campus as well. For example, the Portable Immersive Theater could be used for demonstration to a large audience of student research projects which involve stereographic data visualization in medicine, science, and engineering. The camera rigs and Photomodelling software could be used by students to recreate archeological sites and architectural environments. These are only a few examples of how this proposal could serve the needs of the greater student body beyond the realm of the digital arts.

Available Resources

This proposal was designed to compliment the existing resources available to students through DXARTS by adding new dimensions of exploration. With the addition of these elements, there are enormous possibilities for new connections between technologies and human expression, with various components able to link together to work in concert.

Specifically, the proposal builds on the 3D ambisonic surround sound environment previously granted through the STF. That ambisonic sound environment has proven wildly successful as a format for creative expansion, and has opened new horizons to many. This proposal augments the sound-only environment, allowing students to create works designed for a fully immersive 3D system including visual depth and even touch-responsive haptic tools. The small screen testbed and mini theatre will be housed in Raitt 117 so it can work in concert with the surround sound system already present. In addition, DXARTS has a large mobile sound system used for DXARTS concerts and events in Meany Hall, in which student works are routinely featured, this traveling system is the perfect partner for the Portable Immersive Theatre, allowing students to bring their work to larger audiences in other venues on and off campus.

We have experienced engineers and designers in DXARTS that will plan and build the stereo cinematography rig and camera grid. In addition, DXARTS will invest $10,000 in the fabrication of this rig using in part our own internally-funded professional quality machine shop facilities. By being able to complete this work in house, we are able to make the best use of STF funds and help stretch the resources of the University further. The tools in the Digital Stereographic Cinema Kit (DSCk) build upon and work in concert with the video production equipment currently available to students.

Software will be installed for general access student use in our Open Studio lab, which has drop-in hours as well as after hours access policies. In this lab, DXARTS makes available all of the key software needed to work with digital image content, such as 3D graphics programs Maya and Okino, editing software Final Cut, and compositing tools Motion, Shake and After Effects.

DXARTS already provides funding for Open Studio student lab monitors during morning hours, insurance for all STF equipment, and funding for repairs, upgrades, and installation. DXARTS has three full time technical staff and two part time technical staff. Along with their regular duties they will be available to setup, maintain, and manage the equipment by this proposal. Camera equipment and haptic devices will be housed and managed in the CARTAH equipment resources, which features a web-based reservation system to facilitate student access and inventory.

In addition, DXARTS has spent considerable internal funds renovating lab, storage, and workshop facilities that will house the equipment and provide space for students to work with these tools.

Installation Timeline

We expect to complete all purchases by the middle of Summer quarter, enabling student use of the majority of equipment by the beginning of Autumn 2006. Some specific aspects of the proposal may take slightly longer to implement, as they require parts to be designed and fabricated (such as the stereo rig). We will have Graduate student assistants and designated technical staff assigned to these tasks and will expedite their completion.

Departmental Endorsement

Professor Richard Karpen, Director of DXARTS and CARTAH, fully endorses and this proposal and is willing to help support the implementation and expansion of this Toolkit with DXARTS internal funds, in the event the proposal is funded by the STF committee. This includes purchasing more polarized 3D glasses worn by students and audience members as needed as well as other supplies and materials as needed.

Student Endorsement

I look forward to exploring stereo cinematography, stereo stop-motion production, and 3D cinema display. My film and video work so far has used more traditional means of image capture, and I'd be excited to extending my reach as a filmmaker into a new dimension! In addition, the advent of HDV technology to the UW campus and community would be revolutionary: the ability to produce High Definition video without the hassle of large bulky cameras, pricey HD tapes, and dedicated editing platforms would be excellent. The portability, flexibility, and ease with which HDV will integrate into the desktop computing based editing systems already operational in the DXARTS/CARTAH facilities will make it a good choice for the production of professional quality student film. I heartily support—and indeed helped initiate!—this excellent proposal!

- Noel Paul, Graduate Student, DXARTS

Purchasing these two components (Claytools for Maya and the Omni development kit) will allow us to expand our 3d modeling and haptics research. Claytools is an advanced modeling program that allows the user to use virtual 'clay' to rapidly create compelling models for use in animation or films, or for prototyping installations. These clay models can be integrated tightly with Maya, a pro-level modeling and software application, to provide better control over the modeling environment. Use of the Omni devices are required to 'feel' the models as they are being developed. The second Omni device is needed for research into haptics (the study and application of force feedback to 'feel' virtual objects). We here at DXARTS are interested in using new technologies to expand our art making capacity. The Omni development kit will allow us to write custom software to control haptic environments, robotic arms, or our existing 3d sound array in room 117. The Lemur touch controller is the only commercial device capable of sensing and tracking ten independent fingers. We intend to use this device to explore control interfaces for 3-dimensional sound. The Lemur is fully programmable, meaning we have complete control over how the device tracks user motions and what data we send out to control other entities. We would be able to drop this device into our existing sound environments and control our custom software right from the start - it fits in almost perfectly to our existing hardware and software systems.

- William "Pete" Moss, Graduate Student, MUSIC

The equipment requested within the DXARTS STF proposal will surely enhance my study and research at the University of Washington. Access to the latest equipment is essential to breaking into new territory. The potential of interactive art is what I feel most passionate about. Sensing devices and software are crucial technological needs in order to aspire towards high art in this relatively new field. Currently, I am in an experimental video class with fellow students from varying majors learning the foundations of digital art and it is extremely difficult to push the boundaries of current digital art without the proper equipment. Our class endeavored to create stop-motion films, yet there is only one camera for such an activity, making the situation much more difficult. As I pursue experimental video throughout the academic year, having the proposed equipment will lead to a higher quality of art both now and in the future.

- Gary Pennock, Junior, Digital Arts & Experimental Video Undergraduate

I would like to endorse the DXARTS STF proposal. The program, and the equipment that it supplies, has been invaluable to my education thus far. The STF fund is the ideal way for this program to continue to assist students like me in their learning. Without the assistance of DXARTS and STF, students like myself with a growing interest in cutting edge technology and its applications would not be able to explore the areas of academic interest that we have a growing passion for. The proposal by DXARTS definitely caters to my needs as a student. The HD field digital video cameras and 3D content display systems are especially important to me, and many other students, growing interest in digital media art. I hope that STF is able to allocate the funds necessary to fulfill these needs.

Sincerely,

T. Jared Friend, Undergraduate Student, DXARTS

In continuing my experimental film studies, I fully support the technology fee for DX Arts. I would like to explore more in the realms of stop motion video and would love to see the department garner new equipment in that direction. I'm also interested in seeing how the haptic control and sensing devices would be utilized; my master's thesis is focused on haptic/tactile perception. Cheers,
Callie Neylan | mfa candidate | design

In photography classes 35mm cameras, developer, and film are necessary to learn photography. In computer science computers and software are needed. One cannot thrive in a painting class without without art supplies. How can one learn electrical engineering without circuit boards, wires, and other supplies? Digital cameras are but a tool to learn a subject. In this case the subject is Digital Arts. In order to create, experiment, and learn Digital Arts, supplies are needed just like every other department, and digital cameras are simply one tool necessary to learn, experiment and thrive in this creative environment.

Amir Stone, Undergraduate, Computer Science & DXARTS

My work relies on fairly complex designs which require multiple iterations of prototypes, each consuming time and expensive materials. 3-D software (such as Maya and Solidworks) is valuable in the initial design stage but could be greatly augmented with a display system which will allow me, my advisors, and potential sponsors the ability to see how everything actually works together. By using a projection 3D display to fully visualize their work before building it, students can identify and solve design issues early in the process, saving themselves time and money, and progressing much faster towards their goals. In addition, the proposed 3D display provide fully immersive experiences which cannot be provided by sculpture or screen-based imagery. The participant can fully suspend their disbelief by seeing the display as a window into separate reality, rather than observer it passively like a photograph or video screen. This provides artists with the opportunity to engage on a deeper level while avoiding the difficulties of large-scale installation, and even the constraints of the laws of physics.

Joel Kollin, Graduate Student, DXARTS

As a student in a digital video course I would find it beneficial to have more cameras available within the DXARTS department. There are not enough cameras for the people within the class. The two HDV cameras proposed as well as the stereoscopic camera would be ideal in creating our digital projects. I would like to work further in stop motion and having access to a stereoscopic camera would be essential in producing high quality work within this medium. DXARTS is a creative program and deserves any funding it receives.

- Matthew Salton, Senior, Comparative History of Ideas

As an intermedia artist working with digital video I've become interested in experimental technologies for imaging and film production, in particular in stereoscopic imaging and combination between classic stop motion animation and computer-generated models. Those areas require high-end still cameras, that can guarantee high precision and the highest resolution possible, with a focal length of 35 mm in order to meet today's standards of professional film and video production. Meeting those standards would allow students to create works of art that could be considered for professional public presentations (festivals, exhibitions, conferences) outside of the 'student-work' category.

HD cameras are necessary for the study of experimental cinematography since we are moving into the HD age. The wide/telephoto lens are another must have items because when shooting video in a very confined area (I often find myself in such situation) require wide angle lens to cover greater angles, and telephoto lens for capturing things far away. 3D projection screen and claytools for Maya would really help the DXARTS 3D program and myself because I am interested in 3D immersion and augmented reality and these items are necessary.- DXARTS undergraduate student, Lei Zhang

The potential applications of this equipment are so many -- the areas of research opened up could have substantial impact on graduate and undergraduate research in the arts and humanities at the University. Access to this sort of equipment is currently mostly limited to large private institutions, and the potential for finding creative uses for such emerging technology is unfortunately lacking.

The tools purchased thus far through STF have had a huge impact on interdisciplinary research, allowing artists and and researchers to find new and creative means of expression. If approved, this proposal would enable students to continue that research.

This proposal allows for expanding technology in regards to perception in the arts. I would find this technology very valuable to my own experimental artistic pursuits at the university, which involve a spatial coordination between multiple senses. The implications as far as availability of such equipment in regards to my own work, would be remarkable. Access to HD technology is essential, especially since much of the software DXARTS has in place has the ability to handle such input and would allow for professional level production in the hands of the student. The haptic control systems from Omni and the Lemur touch control would increase the ability for more gestural composition of music and graphics and would help to add a one-to-one level of interaction during creation of a piece. The ability to do so in 3D with force-feedback is pretty mind-blowing! Within in this package there are very many opportunities for research and exploration in and beyond the arts and this should not be passed upon. Student, Johnathan Lyon.

Over the last 4 years this program has received over $800,000.00 USD. This would push that number even higher. Is this appropriate when so few students really use the equipment. I know that a number of students commented on this proposal but has anyone noticed it is only students enrolled in the programs of DXarts. Over the years these funds have been used to build a program for a very small number of students. Also when non-DXarts students try and use these STF funded tools they are required to jump through numerous hoops that are put in place to be able to deny outsider use as much as possible, this is currently an "inside joke" amongst DXarts students. One other point, if you look at DXarts STF grants in the past few years they put in items like "$5000.00 for Cables". Who is keeping track of these folks. My point is, for such a small program they have received the lions share of fuhds over the past four years and I truly question the fairness in that fact, given the highly restricted access and the truly low numbers of student use.

I fully support this proposal to appropriate STF funds toward the purchase of tools necessary for students to work in the realms of stereoscopic imaging, surround sound acoustical design, and 3D modelling. By granting access to the equipment through CARTAH projects, students in ALL departments will be able to utilize these tools for creative research, multi-media project presentation, and artistic work. The proposed package amounts to a very reasonable price tag when you consider the power it will give students to produce state-of-the-art projects. I am very excited about this proposal and hope to see it come to fruition in '06-'07!!!

This is an essential package of tools for the DXARTS department. Students interested in 3D work currently have very limited options for exploring and producing work in the 3D realm.

On the production side, students are mostly limited to 3D computer graphics software. Adding HDV cameras and still cameras to the mix opens up avenues for experimental video students as well as those interested in 3D. It also creates interesting possibilities with compositing live action and computer graphics together without having to flatten to 2D output.

On the exhibition side, this package will provide students with the ability to present 3D work in 3 dimensions which is currently not possible with the available tools. As a department with a strong artistic component, exhibition of work is critical to generating dialogue and garnering constructive feedback. Public exhibition enriches campus culture.

Additionally, this package was put together rather intelligently. Each component is useful to other areas of DXARTS, not just those interested in a specific application of 3D. For example, having some digital cameras available last quarter would have been really helpful in generating texture files for the 3 Space class. High quality texture files are a fairly intrinsic need when rendering 3D images. Some students had to rely on a limited supply of free web-based images that, in some cases, had digital watermarks which interfered with their quality. Lack of access to digital cameras limited the creativity, expressiveness and originality of the projects produced in the class.

Lastly, I think this package is important to keep DXARTS as a competitive program. If the facilities aren't up to snuff and students aren't producing innovative original works then the UW and DXARTS won't attract talented prospective students. The quality of students attracted to the program is paramount to the health and vitality of the program.
James Hughes, PostBac student

The students, faculty and staff of DXARTS are concerned by the comments left anonymously above in field number 5, as the unidentified detractor attempts to obscure and distort the true record and intentions of the DXARTS program in it's mission to serve the student body of the University of Washington. The STF Committee provides the comment field for clear and intelligent feedback, which we are happy to provide in response to the false allegations mentioned above.

1. Claim that "few students really use" DXARTS STF-funded equipment:

DXARTS is one of the most heavily subscribed STF equipment providers on UW campus. Through CARTAH (the Center for Advanced Research Technology in the Arts and Humanities), students use STF funded equipment constantly for their projects. There are currently over 300 active CARTAH projects, many of them involving teams of multiple students working together! Past projects, totaling over 850 since 1997, are archived and available online, as well as archived records of student use of equipment during the last four years detailing the enormous use. The majority of CARTAH projects are directed by undergraduate and graduate students from departments all across campus. The majors served are too numerous to list here, but include areas as diverse as Biology, Business, Art, English, Anthropology, Engineering, and Geography. All of these CARTAH projects involve use of STF-funded facilities and/or equipment, and every STF-funded item in our database sees heavy and continual use throughout all four quarters of the academic year. This information is available via our online checkout system (<http://www.washington.edu/cartah/>), and via our administrative staff (haslam@u.washington.edu, stacy@u.washington.edu). For a brief look at how many students use our facilities and equipment, and from what departments, please visit the "current projects" page of the CARTAH website: <http://www.washington.edu/cartah/projects.php>

2. Claim that only students "enrolled in the programs of DXARTS" have endorsed and commented upon this proposal:

A cursory glance at past and present STF endorsements universally reveals that non-DXARTS majors have enthusiastically supported our proposals, including the current one. Perusal of all departments' STF proposals typically show similar ratios of non-departmental student endorsements to departmental endorsements. DXARTS endorsement patterns are consistent with all other STF funded programs, and are much higher if the DXARTS double majors are fairly considered.

3. Claim that STF funds granted to DXARTS have "been used to build a program for a very small number of students.":

As our annual report shows, last year alone DXARTS courses alone served 700 students, particularly impressive considering almost all of the classes are high contact hour studio format sessions. In fact, DXARTS courses by design contain more than 50% non-majors, even in 400 level sequences where in many other degree-granting programs those classes are reserved for majors only. Our facilities are open to the general student body, as well as our all our STF equipment through CARTAH. The STF funds granted to DXARTS have and will continue to be used to open up a high impact and technology pioneering program to the larger student body at UW, fulfilling our mission of what we were uniquely designed to do on this campus. Furthermore, the sheer number of students who are from other majors currently involved in using STF equipment through CARTAH projects is more than 1000% greater than the total number of DXARTS majors.

A substantial portion of DXARTS internal funds have been devoted to, and continue to be used for expenses that enable use of equipment and facilities be the UW student body. These include renovation of rooms that house labs and store equipment, matching funds to purchase equipment, insurance for the items, and staff and graduate assistants who maintain the resources, develop new tools to benefit student usage, and oversee checkout of the equipment, undergraduate lab monitors to provide open drop-in hours, etc.

4. Claim: "When non-DXarts students try and use these STF funded tools they are required to jump through numerous hoops that are put in place to be able to deny outsiders use as much as possible."

In order to use our STF-funded equipment all students (including DXARTS majors) must simply apply for a CARTAH project, where almost all proposed CARTAH projects are approved. The few that are not approved usually entail requests for protracted use of unique equipment outside of the CARTAH labs or requests to use video for personal, non-academic projects. After approval, the student simply and easily makes a reservation for a piece of equipment on the online reservation system developed and maintained by DXARTS. Some of our more specialized equipment (like the Glidecam) requires specific training for students to use it most effectively. To facilitate use of these items, our graduate student assistants and tech administrators provide one on one training sessions. In fact, our GSAs frequently go out of their way to help students working on projects during late hours, even if it is not their assigned task.

5. Out of context use of a budget number, quoting "$5000 for cables":

The anonymous individual used a line item number from the DXARTS Incubator Open Studio (2005-079) proposal which was funded by the STF committee, and implemented by DXARTS. The proposal included matching funds from Apple Computer secured by DXARTS to outfit 30 Mac G5 workstations with numerous pieces of outboard hardware and sophisticated software packages. When assembling a networked high-end open lab containing so many computers connected to so many outboard hardware devices in studio and editing suite arrangements, $5000 is a completely reasonable number, representing less than 1% of the total funds spent by Apple, DXARTS internal funds, and STF on realizing the Open Studio Project. All the items in our proposals are diligently researched and confirmed by our students, faculty, and staff before being submitted to the STF for consideration, who then double checks the veracity of the requests as well. Also note, in the event of reduced prices and/or adjustments in specific purchase requests, DXARTS has a strict policy and documented history of returning any surplus funds to the STF committee.

6. Question, "Who is keeping track of these folks?"

This is a modern research university, where accountability and redundancy are built in to the fabric of the culture and overlay the process of all purchases. The STF committee, in conjunction with UW Purchasing, UW Accounting, UW Legal, and DXARTS' own internal records provide state required accountability infrastructure which keep all expenditures including STF-granted funds legal, efficient, and transparent. In addition to the documentation we have already provided online and to the multiple University governing administrative bodies to which DXARTS reports, we would like to invite the individual who previously posted, or any other interested persons for a tour of our facilities to demonstrate the outstanding opportunities for educational enrichment and access the Center provides.

The point of the STF proposal and funding process is to provide cutting edge opportunities, tools, support and experience to the student body of UW, in order to help students develop original thought and research. DXARTS is the embodiment of these ideals, and has worked very hard over the years to realize these goals. Beyond providing just drop-in labs, CARTAH and DXARTS provide generous support and expertise to facilitate student engagement in more complex and ambitious research and creative projects. We hope any concerns that might have been generated in comment 5 above have been addressed here. If any linger, please do not hesitate to contact DXARTS directly, and we'll be happy to answer your questions and provide any additional documentation needed.

We are proud to sign our name to this proposal and we are proud of the contribution, excellent resources, services, and opportunities that we work to provide daily to the student body of the University of Washington thanks to the generosity, hard work, and thoughtful stewardship of the STF committee.

Sincerely,

The Students, Faculty, and Staff of DXARTS and CARTAH, who worked together in writing this document.

I hope the access to these items is better than previous funded items. We will be checking on this and documenting access.
